Rob Sentz
CHIEF INNOVATION OFFICER

Emsi chief innovation officer Rob Sentz is a sought-after expert on labor market analytics and talent trends. A frequent expert commentator on the state of the labor market, Mr. Sentz has been quoted in the Wall Street Journal, The New York Times, The Associated Press, and a host of other news sources.

» At Emsi, Mr. Sentz leads a team of researchers and content creation specialists who daily sift through labor market data and analytics to discern and advise on future trends for higher education, economic development, workforce development, and talent acquisition.

» His team’s work has been widely credited in helping a broad array of audiences improve the way they connect people, economies, and work. Mr. Sentz’s work has been used by some of America’s most successful companies, major universities, and domestic and international government entities.

» Mr. Sentz regularly presents on labor market topics at a wide range of conferences across the US. He also teaches courses for professional development organizations, including the NYU School of Professional Studies, and he is a frequent contributor to a variety of publications. Mr. Sentz and his family reside in the Pacific Northwest.